The Chriselle Factor Passpo factor is not a problem until you dig your password out the night before having an international flight and realize that it's expired (uh oh). No matter if you're headed abroad on a solo trip, on a girl's vacation, or even on your honeymoon, you'll need to make sure you've got a valid passport in advance. As long as your passport has been given to you in the last 15 years and haven't been damaged, you'll have several options to choose from when it comes to renewal, all based on the crunch the time you're under for summer travel. Going on a trip would be all about having fun, and we think it should be as stress-free as possible. So we've rounded up everything you need to know about passport renewal. Sit back, relax, roll in, and learn how to renew your passport with ease. Passport renewal is not a quick process -- if you don't plan to pay the expedited fee, it can take six to eight weeks to start ending. As soon as you have a trip on the calendar, count how many weeks (or months) out you can; obviously the sooner you get started, the better. If a vacation abroad pops up at the last minute, don't worry: You can pay an additional fee to speed up the process so it only takes two to three weeks. If you need to throw wear out of the country within 14 days, there is also an option to visit a passport renewal desk in your city (but more on that later). If you're going to renew your passport by mail, you can download the necessary forms online, print them, fill them out, and mail them in. It is not possible to submit them electronically at this time. If you are paying a fee to expedite the process, a personal check or a money order in which the amount will have to be included in your application (also make sure you write Reinstation on the outside of your envelope). It is also recommended by the U.S. Department of State to use a mail tracking service since you will send personal documents. As we mentioned above, if this is a rushed job and you're travelling internationally within 14 days, it is necessary for you to go to your nearest passport agency. You must make an appointment before calling the National Passport Information Center, but it won't cost you anything to set up a time. Get everything together that you'll need in advance: your most recent passport, a picture color, a copy of your wedding certificate (if your name changed), and your personal checkbook. If you're going to people, you should also bring proof of travel such as your flight details and ticket receipts. And, more importantly, once you get your new passport, keep it safe in a chic case like the one below. Wollertz/ShutterstockAttention, Hustle series: Do you have a trip -- local or abroad -- coming in the near future? If your passport is set to expire soon (or you need to get a new one), you might want to be sent to these applications sooner rather than later. Why? For starters, process times are shorter between September and December, according to the U.S. State Department. (Find out why they don't want you to vacation in these cities in Mexico, though.) Demand for passports usually increases once the New Year is hit and continues in the summer. To get your passport back quickly, it's best to get a head start now before rush to upset winter vacation. Aside times processing, though, has another reason to ensure that your passport is valid and up-to-date: The real identity law will enter into effect next year. This law sets certain standards for drivers' state licenses, in order for them to be considered as a valid federal ID for use in airport security controls. It goes without saying that no the right ID could lead to a massive headache at airport security. To cover all your bases, you'll want to travel with both your state license and your passport. In this way, if your license is not compliant, you can just whip out a valid passport-issue resolved. Be sure to avoid these airport error errors before your next flight, too. In order to receive a new passport, you will need to appear in person. Looking to renew? Renewals can be done by mail, but be sure to send in this form before your original passport expires. Learn more about why your valid passport might expire in some countries. If you are the owner of an American passport, you might be curious about where the sentence is left quo from. Safe travels! [Source: LA Times] The dimension could not be better--or else else national: The National Passport Day is Saturday 27 March, coming on the talent of a State Department proposal to elevate fees associated with applying for a passport. But the fees might no longer be in effect, meaning it will be cheaper and easier to find a passport than you're likely to get any time soon. So what do they benefit National Passport Day, exactly? It is an opportunity for people to visit their regional passport office and apply for a passport or renewal without an appointment. Plus, since the event falls on a Saturday, people can visit the office without worried about taking time off work. There will also be passport-tested events, and details will be held as well as a list of participating offices. Check back the closest 27 for more information. As I said above, this is a good opportunity--especially for citizens without passports--to apply The new set of fees goes into effect (supposed to do). Keep in mind that you can be renewed by mail under certain circumstances. Readers, Will You Use National Passport Day? We hand-select everything we recommend and select items to test and review. But that doesn't mean you should wait to apply for or renew your passport, because there may be a long line in front of you. As USA Today reported, the State Department cut back on passport operations from mid-March through June as part of their efforts to reduce the spread of COVID-19. According to the agency's website, suspended application processing for reinforcements during this time and only provided passports for life-or-death emergencies. As a result, the implementation of balloons is $1.8 million per worker time back in June. While passport agencies are slowly reopen, the State Department is not at full capacity - and those who apply for non-emergency passports will still experience a delay. You can check on the operation status of your local passport agency here. You may have the option to apply in person to an acceptance facility or you may renew your passport by mail. While the State Department does not list now expect wait times on their website, some users are getting estimates via Twitter. All applicants should continue to expect process delays in several months as we work to get through a large volume of applications, the agency said in a tweet on August 10. Even if your passport hasn't expired for several months, you should start the renewal process now. It can save you from stress awaiting your passport to come across after you've already booked a trip -- and you can avoid paying extra for reinstation services later. After applying, you can check the status of the online application or by calling the agency at (877) 487-2778.G/O Media may find a Commissionanker Nebula Solar ProjectorAnother reason to apply now: It will give you something to look forward to once the end of the pandemic. While it can be difficult to imagine the eye-setting of exotic destinations now, it will still be interesting to receive that new shiny passport in the mail. You can even start working on a travel rewards strategy or saving money for a future trip. With your new passport in hand, it will be easier to start traveling again once it's safe. Security.
